EICHMANN, WITH HIS SATANIC EXTERMINATION OPERATIONS, WAS ALWAYS HARD ON TRACK OF FLEEING JEWS TO POUNCE AS STRATAGEMS OF GOVERNMENTS WERE TAKEN TO HELP THEM ESCAPE DRAGNET; "EVERY ITALIAN JEW OWES HIS LIFE TO THE ITALIAN POPULATION"

A Jewish community existed in Berlin right up through the middle of 1943 and then it became extinct, a surviving witness testified at the trial of Adolf Eichmann, in the Court of Jerusalem, for the murder of six million Jews. Telling the story of the gradual, precisely-calculated obliteration of the Jewish community by the Nazis, Mrs. Hildegarde Henschel, widow of the last president of the community organization, described how she and her husband and a few thousand last-ditch volunteer workers were the last remnant to be shipped out of Berlin in the summer of 1943.

They were sent to the extermination camps where, though she and her husband, Moritz, survived, most members of the community were put to death, the witness said, writes Robert S. Bird, in the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Henschel died in 1947 in Tel Aviv.

Even in 1940 after all the pre-war persecutions and outrages and arrests of Jews in Germany, Mrs. Henschel testified, there remained 80,000 Jews in Berlin. But she said that by the end of 1940 the suicide rate had risen very high.

Between October, 1940, and January, 1941, she testified, 1,200 Jews committed suicide in Berlin.

The Israeli prosecution of Adolf Eichmann, charged with chief responsibility for the killing of millions of Jews in World War II, completed its evidence on Nazi anti-Jewish operations in Denmark, Norway and Italy and began the story of the end of Jewry in Germany. Previous witnesses had told the story of Jewish persecutions in Germany up to the war's outbreak.

In drawing the picture of the extermination activities in Norway and in Italy, the prosecution put on the stand two other women witnesses, both of whom gave vivid first-hand accounts of what it meant to be a cultured Jewish woman and a mother in the maelstrom which overwhelmed the Jews when the Nazis arrived in those countries.

The Norwegian witness said that about 1,700 Jews were living in Norway when the Germans arrived in April, 1940, and 1,200 of them lived in Oslo. Of that number, about half were taken to the Auschwitz extermination center by the Germans and only a dozen survived, she said.

One of those who vanished was her husband, a rabbi, she testified. She told how she and her children were smuggled from Norway to Sweden by the non-Jewish Norwegian underground, says the New York Herald Tribune. Part of the journey they made in potato trucks, with the children drugged to keep them quiet and all in instant danger of being shot.

The Italian woman, a teacher with two children of her own, hid from the Nazis both in Catholic convents and in Protestant homes in Italy, while her husband was taken away by the Germans, never to be heard from again.

The prosecution again brought out with special emphasis that the non-Jewish populations in these other countries had greatly helped the Jewish refugees. The Italian woman was asked to explain why she thought the non-Jewish population was so ready to risk their lives by providing shelter. She answered:

"One reason was, no doubt, the hatred of the conquerors, which is deeply rooted in good Italian tradition. Another is the hatred of the Germans themselves, and the idea of liberation with the assistance of the partisans. But, of course, there was the goodness, the kind-heartedness we met with. Every Italian Jew owes his life to the Italian population."

The prosecution put into evidence an affidavit by an Italian researcher which showed that 7,496 Jews were expelled from Italy and only 610 returned.

The Berlin witness, Mrs. Henschel, has lived there since the war. Her husband was a Berlin lawyer. Before his death he gave a lecture in Tel Aviv on the end of the Berlin Jewish community and a stenographic transcript of this was put into the record before his widow testified.

The widow was asked to explain how the Jews of Berlin committed suicide, whether as individuals or in families. She answered that very few parents were willing to abandon their children, but where there were no children, husbands and wives often chose suicide when separated from their spouses, says the New York Herald Tribune. Her story was one of a relentless fate steadily overtaking the Jewish population, which clung together, living with almost no hope.

One of the great blows to the Berlin Jewish community of the war years was in 1942, when the Nazis inaugurated the idea of shooting Jewish hostages in retaliation for the killing of Germans. They not only shot fifty Jews for each German, but they deported the families of the Jewish hostages, Mrs. Henschel said. In 1943, she said, another blow came when the Nazis pulled Jews from out of the factories and began to ship them off to the death camps.

It was in June, 1943, that she and her husband were taken off in a transport with 300 bed-ridden patients from the Jewish Hospital, where the witness was a volunteer worker. They were almost the last.

Mrs. Henschel said her husband had been spared early arrest only because as community leader he could direct Berlin Jewish affairs. Mr. Henschel was repeatedly called to Eichmann's office after the roundup for the Eastern European death camps began in 1941, she testified.

By 1943 virtually all the community workers had been shipped off, and the remaining few were on the transport Mr. and Mrs. Henschel rode to the concentration camp at Theresienstadt, Czechoslovakia. The Henschels escaped the gas chambers because of the capture of Theresienstadt by the Soviet Army in 1945.

The Italian woman who testified was Dr. Chulda Campagnano, whose father and brother were university professors and who was herself a mathematician teaching in Milan at the outbreak of the war.

She testified that in Fascist Italy the Jews, even though discriminated against, had ample means of livelihood and felt physically safe. But the Nazis took over in September, 1943. Everything changed, says the New York Herald Tribune. They came as conquerors, she said, and they immediately began their persecutions of the Jews.

Her husband, a merchant; her brother, a rabbi, and her sister-in-law, all were arrested and she began what she called her "wanderings" with her own two children and her sister's three children.

She stayed in various convents as a boarder, she said, but always in fear that she would be discovered by the Nazis. Testifying about her experience in one convent, she said:

"It was dangerous, because among the boarders in the convent was a woman and her daughter who were hiding for an entirely different reason — they were Fascists and known in the town. They were hiding for fear of revenge from the partisans. Our rooms were next door to each other in the convent."

"There were also orphan girls among whom was a twelve-year-old Jewish girl. She helped the nuns with their work. One evening she came into our room and said that the two Fascist women were whispering that we were Jewish. That night we understood that we had no choice but to be on the move again and we didn't wait for dawn. It was a very cold night in February, 1944, and we escaped, not knowing where we would go."

Dr. Campagnano said she was unable to find refuge that night and returned to the convent for one more night of fear. Then a Protestant clergyman got one of her children into a Protestant family, put herself and the others into an evacuated home for the aged, where she stayed until the end of the war.

The Norwegian phase of the prosecution's case began with the submission of documents establishing the Nazi procedures for rounding up Norway's Jews and transporting them by ship to Auschwitz in Poland, says the New York Herald Tribune. A general directive for the Auschwitz deportations signed by Adolf Eichmann, an S.S. (Nazi Elite Guard) officer under Eichmann's command.

But the most vivid picture of the plight of the Norwegian Jews was given by a victim herself — Henrietta Samuel, whose husband was Chief Rabbi of Norway. She testified about the early 1942 roundups of Jews after the Nazi invasion of Norway and of the sudden disappearance of her husband after Gestapo men called for him. He never returned, she said, although he was traced to Germany by the Norwegian underground.

In November, 1942, another surprise action was taken by the Nazis and the Jewish women and children were arrested and taken off. But many of them escaped and went into hiding.

The witness described how she and her three children were taken out to Sweden by the Norwegian underground, whose members risked instant death if caught, she said. After the war she got documented evidence that her husband had been exterminated in 1943.

Before completing the Scandinavian phase of the Jewish deportations, Schottor General Gabriel Saeh put into the record a collection of documents showing the Danish resistance to Nazi persecution of Jews.

A Nazi Foreign Ministry official was quoted in one document as relaying word that the late King Christian X was greatly exercised at the German actions against the Danish Jews, who had lived in Denmark with full privileges for generations, says the New York Herald Tribune. Other documents depicted Eichmann himself as angry over the uneven course of anti-Jewish operations in Denmark.

When Attorney General Hausner described the S.S. (elite guard) men at the extermination camps offering sweets to quiet down terrified children as they were brought into the death room to be gassed, he never moved. Nor did he show any emotion when the prosecutor gave the most horrifying glimpses yet into the actual details of extermination in the camps.

But these recitals left the three judges lost in profound thought, and the 760 spectators in the room were slumped in postures of an evil spell.

Mr. Hausner said this about the defendant at the conclusion of his address:

"I am afraid that even after submitting all the material which we have established and all the evidence in our possession, we shall not be able to do more than give a pale reflection of the enormous human and national tragedy which occurred to Jewry in this generation."

"Adolf Eichmann will enjoy a privilege which he did not accord to even a single one of his victims. He will be able to defend himself before the court. His fate will be decided according to law and according to the evidence, with the burden of proof resting upon the prosecution. And the judges of Israel will pronounce true and righteous judgment."

Earlier, the prosecutor said that the idea of exterminating the Jews with poison gas was first mentioned in Hitler's book "Mein Kampf," "when he wrote that if 12,000 to 15,000 Jews had been poisoned during the First World War, a million Germans would have been saved."

After experiments with gas were made in Poland by a Nazi named Globocnik during World War II, Mr. Hausner added, "Eichmann travelled personally to Globocnik to inform him that his experiments would be adopted for use on a general scale. Eichmann also got a poison gas expert to work on the plan, he said."

Mr. Hausner said that Eichmann made a tour with Rudolf Hoess to select a site for the erection of gas installations at Auschwitz and that "he and his department dealt with the obtaining of bleasauers gas, termed zyklon B, composed of hydrogen cyanide."

Before describing the mass murder factory of Auschwitz, says the New York Herald Tribune, Attorney General Glendon Hausner mentioned some of the horrors of other death camps in Poland, and it was here that he quoted a description of an actual railroad transport from Lodz, apparently as it was experienced by a survivor.

The spectators in the trial chamber heard this account with a chill, as it told how the "Jewish transport" called "the death camp" was taken from the train.

Attorney General Hausner took up the step-by-step process of rounding up and shipping out for extermination the Jews of Northern, Western, Central and Southern Europe in the period following the September, 1939, decision which comprised the Nazis' master plan for ridding Europe of Jews.

He said that in Holland "the Jews began to hide, as in the case of the well known family of Anne Frank." He accused Eichmann of giving instructions to increase the reward promised to any one revealing hidden Jews.

He described the vast cargoes of plunder from the Jews that began to move toward German distribution points — "altogether 25,436 freight cars sent in 735 special trains loaded with the stolen property of Western European Jews."

Constantly he linked Eichmann directly into the picture he painted, saying Eichmann "learned" this, or "gave instructions" for that, or "wrote about" such and such a matter, or "made arrangements" for this or that.

He said that documents would be submitted on most of the accusations he was making — for deportation to Auschwitz, for labor drafts to the slave camps, for compulsory sterilization of children of mixed marriages, for more repressive measures in the concentration camps, and so on.

The prosecutor brought out a sad story of the various stratagems taken by many of the governments of Europe to help Jews escape from the voracious maw of the extermination dragnet, most of which failed in the end to save any substantial numbers of the persecuted victims, says the New York Herald Tribune. He depicted Eichmann as following always hard on the track ready to pounce wherever Jews were finding escape.

Sweden, Denmark, Italy, were among the countries which Attorney General Hausner mentioned as trying to save Jews from the murder camps. He said, "The Italian government, however, and his office, hid these 'monsters'."

"The Pope himself intervened on behalf of the arrested Roman Jews," he asserted.

In this grim recital the prosecutor took up country after country where the extermination program was going forward, tying in Eichmann to each activity by his own orders and decrees and by his delegated assistants in each country.

Brights Wines
FINE CANADIAN
SINCE 1874

At your sabbath table, a decanter of wine is as much at home as a challah.

No wine is more welcome in Jewish homes in Canada than Mazel Tov, a wine made from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov is ruby red in colour, and richly sweet—but not cloying—to the taste. It's a wine you'll "remember", the kind of wine that you used to taste many years ago.

Mazel Tov, made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every 'simcha'.

The Elegance we bring in your home enhances your personal taste.

Greece. Mr. Hausner put on Eichmann the blame for the slaughter of Christian children in the massacre which wiped the Czech town of Lidice off the face of the earth.

Finally Mr. Hausner reached the year 1944 when only Hungary remained with a large Jewish population.

"Eichmann brought into Hungary his whole group of accomplices, the entire gang of murderers, who together with him had carried out the extermination program in the various conquered lands," the prosecutor said, reports the New York Herald Tribune. "The arch exterminator himself took his place at the head of this group, controlling the dirty work in the field."

Here he appears not only as the one who pulls the strings, directs, plans, stimulates and is generally responsible for the implementation but also as an independent executive officer.

Attorney General Hausner described the preparations being made at Auschwitz concentration camp "for intensified extermination" and gave details on a meeting between Rudolf Hoess, the commandant at Auschwitz and Eichmann in Budapest. The prosecutor continued:

"Finally they compromised — two trains one day and three the next. And indeed Auschwitz had never witnessed a period of such feverish activity as in the summer and autumn of 1944."

"The gas chamber and furnaces worked day and night. Matters reached such a pitch that bodies were burned in the open field. There were times when, in one sweep, more than 10,000 Jews a day were destroyed."

Mr. Hausner said that the mass deportations from Hungary began in May, 1944, and that while a daily average of 12,000 Jews were being moved toward the extermination camps "parallel negotiations interspersed with threats of extermination and promise of rescue were in progress between Eichmann, Kastner, and Joel Brand."

Israel Kastner was the representative of the Jewish Rescue Committee, and it was Joel Brand who was chosen as the emissary to bring Germany's fantastic offer — "blood for goods" to the Western world. He was supposed to take Eichmann's offer to Jewish Rescue people in Istanbul.

"Jews were to be saved in return for trucks, coffee, tea and soap," the prosecutor said.

Kastner is dead, but Joel Brand was a witness in this trial, and was already in Jerusalem. The Brand rescue story apparently was offered in two versions, one, Eichmann's version, in which he tried to make it appear he was actually trying to save the Jews and made the "blood for goods" offer in good faith, and the other, the prosecution version. As regards this, Mr. Hausner said:

"There was one man who disapproved of the whole deal, who carried out Himmler's instruction to send Brand to Istanbul with notable distaste, who strove with all his might to sustain the extermination and murder operations."

"Adolf Eichmann! He started mass deportations immediately after Joel Brand had departed. He announced that if an immediate affirmative reply was not received from Brand, 'I shall let the Auschwitz mills work' and while making a pretense that the survivors would be saved if the deal succeeded, he persisted in his satanic extermination operations."

Joel Brand, the frustrated emissary of Adolf Eichmann's offer to trade Jews for trucks, testified later that not only British but even Jewish leaders had not believed his story, says the New York Times.

Mr. Brand, like Samuel Taylor Coleridge's Ancient Mariner, has been wandering about for years telling his grievous story to all who would listen. Instead of an albatross, Mr. Brand says, he has "1,000,000 Jews on my back."

He repeated that phrase in court again. He testified that he almost became ill when Lord Moyne, wartime British Resident Minister in the Middle East, reacted frivolously to Eichmann's offer to free 1,000,000 Jews for 10,000 army trucks.

"What shall I do with 1,000,000 Jews?" Lord Moyne had asked, according to Mr. Brand.

"Where should we put them?" Mr. Brand said Lord Moyne had replied. Mr. Brand said he was even more depressed by the incredulous reaction he encountered from Jewish Agency leaders in Istanbul, Turkey, when he arrived there from Budapest straight from his meeting with Eichmann in May, 1944. Eichmann had made the offer as head of the Gestapo (security police) section assigned to the annihilation of Jews.

Mr. Brand said he had found that if he mentioned the figure 1,000,000 Jews, no one believed him. So he used more modest figures, he said — 20,000; 10,000; 5,000. The Jews were to be saved at the rate of 10 Jews a truck.

Under sharp questioning from the court Mr. Brand lashed out in bitter anger at the apathy he said he had found among some Jews who were aware of the slaughter of Jews in Hungary.

Mr. Brand, a Hungarian Jew, said "a lie" to suggest that Jewish leaders had been ignorant of the dimensions of the tragedy. "We had sent reports to Istanbul, Palestine, London and New York," he cried, "They should have believed us!"

Mr. Brand was arrested on the Turkish-Syrian frontier when he arrived for a rendez-vous with Moshe Sharett, who was then head of the political department of the Zionist organization, says the New York Times. The British took him to Cairo, where he was interrogated from morning to night.

He said he was kept in a big, nice room, given good food, fruit, anything I wanted. He was taken to parties, even to the Anglo-Egyptian Club, he said. One night he met a tall, slim man there whose name he did not catch.

"This man went through all the same old questions again," Mr. Brand testified.

"It was too much for me. Then came his final remark: 'What shall I do with 1,000,000 Jews?'"

"I was beside myself. I said, 'I feel unwell,' and left. As I was leaving they told me: 'That was Lord Moyne.'"

Lord Moyne was assassinated in November, 1944, by the Stern organization, a Palestinian Jewish terrorist organization that Mr. Brand joined after he was released by the British in October and had settled in Palestine.

ner at which he was presented with a certificate of the inscription of his name in the Golden Book of the Jewish National Fund. More than 200 delegates and guests were present. Mr. Friedman said: "I suggest the Zionist task is basically what it always was and that being a Zionist is what it always was: That a Zionist works and participates for Israel and the Jewish people; that he recognizes the United Israel Appeal must continue to be of primary importance, and that in the State that now exists, but which 13 years ago did not exist, there are new and greater and more complex problems than ever before. Zionism's Tragic Hero

BY RICHARD COHEN

Twenty-one years after his death, Vladimir Jabotinsky continues to be a center of controversy in the life of the Jewish State toward whose founding he dedicated his blazing energy and his prodigious talents. This time it is not the Revisionist leader's insistence that Israel's territory must lie across both sides of the Jordan that is causing the debate, nor his views opposing Socialism both as an economic system and as a dilution of Zionism. Rather, as an ironic tribute to the vitality of the most exciting figure in Zionism after Herzl himself, it is Jabotinsky's remains that are the basis of argument in the Jewish press in Israel and around the world.

Jabotinsky died on August 3, 1940 in Hunter, N. Y., while on a visit to a summer camp operated by Betar, the paramilitary youth group of the Revisionist movement. In his last will he wrote that he wanted to be buried "just wherever I happen to die; and my remains (should I be buried outside of Palestine) may not be transferred to Palestine unless by order of that country's eventual Jewish Government." His assumption that there would be a Jewish government in Palestine was typical of his supreme confidence in the eventual triumph of Zionism; his expectation that there might be opposition by Zionists to bringing his bones to the Jewish State was also justified. An order such as Jabotinsky sought has not yet been given; Prime Minister Ben-Gurion has said that in his view only the remains of Theodor Herzl and of Baron Edmond de Rothschild ought to be reburied in Israel; as for all others, Israel "needs live Jews not dead ones."

Ben-Gurion's refusal to grant the order that would return Jabotinsky's remains to Israel was contained in a letter to Joseph B. Schechtman, friend and co-worker of Jabotinsky for more than thirty years and now his biographer. The second volume of Schechtman's monumental life of Jabotinsky, entitled Fighter and Prophet (Thomas Yoseloff, $7.50) and covering the last seventeen years of Jabotinsky's life, has now been published. It more than fulfills the promise of the earlier volume, Rebel and Statesman; together, the two volumes comprise not merely the life and times of the most brilliant and dynamic figure of the post-Herzl period but a fascinating history of the Zionist movement.

The Jewish world stands in debt to Mr. Schechtman for his labor of love. Historians of the future, evaluating the history of Zionism and Jabotinsky's role in it from a more distant perspective in time, have been given a treasure-house of materials from which to draw. The book is filled with Schechtman's own personal reminiscences of Jabotinsky and interviews with Jabotinsky's closest collaborators. Ben-Gurion himself read the chapter, entitled "The Abortive Ben-Gurion Romance," describing the 1934 negotiations and agreement signed by Jabotinsky, on behalf of the Revisionist World Union, and Ben-Gurion, for the Zionist Executive, establishing a truce among the various contending Zionist parties; forbidding "acts of terror or violence" and "libel, slander (and) insult to individuals or groups" and calling for a provisional modus vivendi between the Socialist Histadrut and the Revisionist National Labor Federation. (The Histadrut repudiated Ben-Gurion by rejecting the labor agreement with Jabotinsky in a referendum.) It is almost as if a biography of Patrick Henry — whose role as firebrand of the American Revolution was not too unlike Jabotinsky's contribution to Zionism — had been written by James Monroe a few years after Henry's death, with George Washington available to read the chapters on his own relations with Henry.

Fighter and Prophet opens in 1923, shortly before Jabotinsky organized the Revisionist movement. The book traces, in fascinating detail and with hundreds of illustrative anecdotes, quotations from letters, excerpts from speeches and recapitulations of correspondence, the bitter battles which Jabotinsky fought with his own supporters and with his opponents within the Zionist movement. It is Schechtman's view that Jabotinsky was a prophet born too soon; from the vantage point of history, he makes out an effective case.

It was Jabotinsky who led the fight against the Palestine Partition Plan of 1937 (which Weizmann was willing to accept and which would have forfeited some 90 percent of Palestine to the Arabs); Jabotinsky who foresaw the tragedy of the annihilation of East European Jewry and called, as early as 1936, for the evacuation of Poland's Jewish masses to Palestine — a call whose main result was to bring down the wrath and scorn of Zionist leadership on Jabotinsky's head; Jabotinsky who in 1934 — again over the opposition of veteran Zionist leaders, including Ussishkin and Ben-Gurion — launched the illegal immigration movement into Palestine, which he called "our national sport"; Jabotinsky who fathered Jewish armed resistance by founding the Hagannah in 1920 and, later, commanding the Irgun Zvai Leumi.

This, then, was Jabotinsky — intensely practical and romantically adventurous; heroically consistent and merely stubborn; genuinely prophetic and wildly visionary. But there was more to Jabotinsky than the Zionist politician. He was a man of many parts: an orator of powerful ability; a brilliant conversationalist steeped in the literature and history of a dozen lands; an essayist of trenchant power and lucid style; a linguist, novelist and poet, as well as a devoted husband and father. Schechtman gives us the man as well as the Zionist in a warmly sympathetic tribute. In doing so, he presents a vigorous defense against the charges that Revisionism was a species of Jewish Fascism; that Jabotinsky was unjust in accusing the Labor Party (Mapai) of fomenting class war; that his movement aspired for an "Arabless Palestine"; and that his personal philosophy was militaristic.

Was Jabotinsky, for all his fire and brilliance, the victim of his own reputation? Was it merely bad Revisionist public relations that caused Stephen Wise, who in 1933 had befriended Jabotinsky, to describe him in 1955 as "a menace to the security of the people of Israel and dangerous to the future of Zionism"?

Schechtman answers clearly

"yes." Jabotinsky, he says, was misunderstood, misinterpreted, maligned. "Jabotinsky's tragedy," he writes, "was a classic one of a thinker and statesman who was years ahead of his time and his contemporaries. Before him this was the tragedy of Theodor Herzl . . . Like Herzl, Jabotinsky was born into Jewry decades too early and had to pay the usual price which History extracts from his precocious children. He could not gather around him the majority of his people because this majority was not ready for him. . . . All his life, he fervently argued with his own people, trying to implant ideas in the reluctant Jewish public and move them to deeds that ran counter to the entrenched pattern of their mentality. Hence ensued a long intermittent struggle between Jabotinsky and his people."

There is another tragedy to Jabotinsky as well, and Schechtman touches upon it, albeit briefly. For it was not merely the Jewish masses that Jabotinsky could not reach (except in relatively small numbers); toward the end, he could not control even his own people. As Rosh (head) of Betar, commander-in-chief of the Irgun and president of the New Zionist Organization, Jabotinsky was equipped with broad — almost dictatorial — powers. Yet as the forces within the movement developed and grew there came a jockeying for position and a maneuvering for advantage that dismayed the veteran leader. A special Revisionist conference he called in Paris in February, 1939, to iron out differences among the various Revisionist subdivisions, he complained, was no longer a "family gathering" but rather a meeting of "business partners," at which each party was struggling for its very own interests, to be written into a formal agreement. A month later, the editors of an Irgun-controlled newspaper in Warsaw referred to Jabotinsky as an "ex-activist and extreme Jewish political thinker who now conducts a policy that seems to us to be a policy of complacency in Zionist affairs, while we are determined to take matters into our own hands."

Could it have been an instinctive fear of the wild wind Revisionism might reap that led to Jabotinsky's eventual isolation from the Zionist movement? Did the sight of uniformed Betar boys lined up in military formation to greet Jabotinsky at an airport chill the hearts of other Zionist leaders into a realization of what these uniformed youth might turn into in a world of Brown Shirts, Black Shirts and Silver Shirts? And yet, who is to say that Jabotinsky was wrong in urging as early as 1930 that the "plain and simple Aleph-Beth" of the new Jewish generation — a generation that unknowingly awaited slaughter by the Nazis — was: "Young man, learn to shoot!" Whatever the answer, one cannot help feeling a touch of pathos as Vladimir Jabotinsky, the aging firebrand of Zionism, says wistfully to a friend: "You know, they (the younger element of his movement) think and speak of me in the same way in which we used to speak of Nahum Sokolow."

Like many another son, the forces Jabotinsky fathered were already beginning to go their own way when the Revisionist leader lay dying in his 69th year. But while Revisionism may have strayed, in the twenty-one years since his death, beyond the paths the movement's founder charted for it, history has followed much of the road Jabotinsky carved out of the world's indifference and his own people's scorn. This is the achievement of Vladimir Jabotinsky; to have helped us recognize it is the achievement of his biographer.

Swiss Law Will Free Unclaimed Assets Of Nazi Victims

Victims of Nazism all over the world are expected to benefit from a Swiss action aimed at releasing heirless assets unclaimed since 1945, to the World Jewish Congress in New York. In a message to the New York headquarters of his organization, Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president, said that he met with Friedrich Wahlen, the Federal President of Switzerland, and with Ludwig von Moos, the head of the Federal Department of Justice and Police.

Dr. Goldmann, who is also the president of the Jewish Agency for Israel, expressed satisfaction on behalf of the organizations he represents at the decision of the Swiss government to submit a draft law concerning the heirless property of persons who presumably fell victims to the Nazis, or whose heirs have not applied for the assets since 1945. These assets will be put at the disposal of a fund that will extend help to religious and racial victims of Nazism.

The moral importance of such a law was stressed by Dr. Goldmann especially since, after the end of World War II, Nazi assets in Switzerland and other neutral countries were used for similar purposes. Dr. Goldmann discussed the details of the law with the Swiss leaders and expressed the hope that, as so many years have already elapsed, it will be swiftly adopted by the Swiss Federal Assembly and implemented with as much speed as possible.

The draft bill will be presented by the Swiss Federal Government through the cantonal governments of the country. These cantonal governments and all other interested parties had until August 31,

WITNESSES OF MASSACRE OF 600,000 BY COMMANDO UNIT, AT BELZEC CAMP, SOUGHT

An investigation into Nazi crimes at Belzec concentration camp, in Poland, is being conducted by the German authorities, with the World Jewish Congress in New York helping to secure testimony.

Belzec was the scene of the death of 600,000 Jews at the hands of a special S.S. Commando unit. Witnesses to the Belzec massacres are asked to come forward to assist in the investigation.

Any person who was an inmate of Belzec and who has any knowledge of the Nazis who participated in the Belzec crimes is requested to get in touch with Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, director, World Jewish Congress Institute of Jewish Affairs, 15 East 84th Street, New York, 28, N.Y.

1961, to present their views, after which the bill went to the Lower Chamber of the Swiss Parliament and then to the Higher Chamber. Passage may be accomplished by December of this year or, at least, by March of 1962.

The bill would make it mandatory for all banks, organizations, and private citizens holding heirless assets unclaimed since 1945 to register them with the Government of Switzerland within six months after passage of the law. There is no estimate as to the sum involved, but it is expected that millions of dollars are involved.
